

An archaeology of 'race'

Exploring the northern frontier in Roman Britain

Segedunum Roman Fort,
Baths & Museum
Wallsend

3 July to 13 September 2009

An archaeology of 'race'

explores issues of multiculturalism on the northern frontier of the Roman empire during the Roman period. Born in AD 146 in Leptis Magna, one of the great colonized cities of Roman Africa, Lucius Septimius Severus ruled Britain from his capital at York.

Tullie House Museum
& Art Gallery
Carlisle

19 September to 25 October 2009

Both during and after his reign, units of soldiers from across the Roman world lived on what we now call 'Hadrian's Wall'. This exhibition explores the everyday life, citizenship and culture of the men and women on the Wall.

photo © Spatial Imaging Ltd